Jennings, a living at the edge of town, says he has been buying coal for the last 25 years, and that the other day while walking through his pasture, he ran onto a couple of prospectors, at work prospecting on his place, and one of them ran his spade into the ground and at the depth of 12 inches showed him a three foot vein of as fine a coal as he ever burned. Mr. Jennings says the woods are full of prospectors, and that they find coal any and everywhere they prospect.—Foster News.
